CORRALLING CLUCKERS

Urban farming popular summer pastime ◗ New Yorkers more apt than ever to source their own food

Five years ago, Benjamin Stein and his wife Arin Kramer received a package at their Boerum Hill brownstone labeled "live birds."

In it were three full-sized chickens they had ordered from a hatchery in the Midwest. A very confused-looking postman handed over the box, and thus began the Steins' pursuit of urban chickening.

The local food-sourcing movement is hardly new. But as more people become conscious of where their food comes from, New Yorkers are taking matters into their own hands, converting backyards and rooftops into compact urban farms.

For Stein, who is also a board member for the nonprofit In Our Backyards, raising chickens is about being more sustainable and utilizing the little green space his family has access to in their small brownstone backyard.

"This is a huge trend for people," Stein explained. "Doing more gardening and raising chickens at home is just another example of people wanting to be more connected with the land in an urban environment."

Urban chickening is also commonplace among immigrants who come from countries where at-home poultry farming is a major food source, like Haiti.

"Not only is it a good way to connect with nature, but a way to connect with their own culture," Elizabeth Bee Ayer, who runs a chicken apprentice program in Crown Heights, told Metro.

For Stein and his family, who now have five chickens, the upkeep of the animals is about the same as a pet hamster. They must be fed each day, and their coop must be cleaned about once a week. They collect between 10 to 20 eggs every week.

For many urban chickeners, the birds become family pets. Stein's chickens are affectionately named after the mothers of his friends: Sandy, Shirley, Rosie, Rhonda and Rosaline.

▶ Children learn about chickens in Brooklyn.

Urban beekeeping has become another popular rooftop or backyard activity, especially since it was legalized in 2010. But honey harvesters say it's a much bigger commitment than most people realize.

Bay Ridge resident and beekeeper Jimmy Johnson told Metro that although beekeeping is a hot urban trend, its popularity could backfire.

"Every little hipster is keeping a beehive, and it's all going to go down, because it's more work than even I realized," Johnson said. "In the city, there is only so much pollen and nectar, and with the spike of hives, there isn't the nectar to support that."

"They are our pets. We hold them, they are friendly, they are great with kids."
BEN STEIN

"Beekeeping is another way to connect with nature. ... And it's another way to build community."
ELIZABETH BEE AYER

For those who are willing to make the commitment, beekeeping is about more than just tens of pounds of honey per year. Ayer, who keeps rooftop bees collectively with the residents of her Brooklyn brownstone, said it provides a sense of community while educating the neighborhood.

"People love it," she said. "Kids want to come up and see them, our neighbors love the honey and many people want to learn about it."

Lawyer suspect arrested at wing joint after murder of Queens woman

QUEENS. Police charged the boyfriend of a murdered Queens woman with her killing Saturday. According to the Queens district attorney's office, Jason Bohn, 33, was arraigned Saturday afternoon on charges of murder, criminal contempt and tampering with evidence. Cops say Bohn, who they reportedly nabbed at a White Plains Buffalo Wild Wings restaurant, beat and strangled to death his girlfriend, Danielle Thomas, 27. He could face up to 25 years to life if convicted. Bohn pleaded not guilty and was held without bail until his next court date, which is July 5. METRO/AB

Last week, Metro reported that a Brooklyn Veterans Treatment Court was the first in the city to offer rehabilitation as an alternative to jail for arrested veterans. However, a similar court exists in Queens to treat drug-addicted veterans. Metro regrets the error.

Plenty more room for farming in New York City

NEW YORK. Urban farming is gaining popularity as more New Yorkers are increasingly interested in utilizing whatever green space they have.

"I think people find ways, living in the city, to be in touch with the source of their food and have a connection with nature," Ayer said.

Although urban farmers report a growing interest from New Yorkers wishing to learn how to keep bees, chickens or gardens, there is still a massive amount of underutilized green space in the city.

A 2012 study by Columbia University determined more than 5,000 acres of vacant land in NYC could be used for agriculture. That's six times the size of Central Park.

▶ Making new friends.

How to get bees and chickens into the city

NEW YORK. New Yorkers interested in raising chickens or bees will have to look outside the city limits.

Urban chicken farmers often order their birds from hatcheries. Eggs, chicks, pullets (young hens) or full-grown chickens can all be shipped through the mail. Breed is an important factor depending on whether the birds will be raised for their eggs or as pets. Elizabeth Bee Ayer warns against keeping chickens on rooftops, because of the lack of soft ground for them to peck. Instead, she recommends small backyards or community gardens.

Live bees can be ordered from an apiary, or bee yard. It costs about $350 to get started, according to Ayer. An urban beekeeper needs to order tools, a hive, about 10,000 live bees and a queen – shipped in a separate box, often with a couple of assistant bees.

Con Ed dispute heats up as temps soar

In the midst of a city heat wave, Consolidated Edison told about 8,000 unionized workers not to come to work Sunday after the power utility company and union leaders failed to agree on a contract.

In the meantime, the company assured customers that managers are taking over maintenance duties.

Con Ed spokesman Alfonso Quiroz confirmed that talks ended early Sunday. Con Ed reportedly suggested extending the current contract for two weeks so that sticky negotiations over pensions and health care could continue, but union leaders refused.

Con Ed officials asked all 8,500 unionized workers not to report to work on Sunday, sparking concerns over possible power outages as temperatures hit almost 100 degrees.

"Con Ed took the extreme measure of locking out its unionized workforce, putting the city of New York and Westchester county in peril," union spokesman John Melia told Reuters.

Quiroz said the two-week extension was still on the table. DANIELA BERNAL

More babies born addicted to painkillers

NEW YORK. Every hour, one baby is born with health problems caused by drug exposure, according to a study by the Journal of the American Medical Association. Sen. Charles Schumer said yesterday that pregnant women should be given more warnings about the dangers of prescription drugs while pregnant. Schumer cited the study's data showing that the number of babies born at Staten Island University addicted to prescription painkillers or other opiates grew by 500 percent in the past two and half years. "It's become a sad fact that the latest victims of the prescription drug crisis in this country are the most vulnerable in our society, innocent babies," Schumer said. METRO/DB

Cops said Ibrahima Ragis, 20, is the main suspect in the four different crimes, all committed around 3 a.m. In three incidences, the suspect threatened women, between 17 and 22, with a knife, and in one case he raped the victim, cops said. In a June 22 attack, a man approached a 20-year-old woman and sexually abused her. Another man, which police say was Ragis, tried to rape her but fled when she fought him. The Perfect Weekend Getaway

My friends and I have spent a lot of our time in search of the perfect weekend getaway. Over the years, we've taken trips to the Hamptons and Fire Island, camping weekends upstate, and a bike trip in Vermont.

While each trip had its particular charms, each was somehow lacking that "perfect" vacation feel. We found the vacation we were seeking in an unlikely place... summer camp. Club Getaway, a "Camp for Grownups" on 300 acres in the Berkshire Mountains of Kent, Connecticut, provides everything we'd been looking for — plenty of cute single campers, summer activities galore and even a little romance for couples.

There is an abundance of instructed activities — trapeze, waterskiing, tennis, mountain and road biking, golf and rock climbing, to name a few.

I decide to try the trapeze for the first time. The cute, muscular instructor straps me into my harness, and before I know it, I am flying through the fresh mountain air.

Sports are not the only choices available to us. We take dance lessons, cooking classes with the Connecticut Culinary Institute, yoga, and our new favorite activity — wine tasting.

Each night is packed with party options. There are delicious dinners, live bands, dancing, even a roaring bonfire.

We managed to try kayaking, hiking, skiing, and tennis. All of our high energy activities have balanced out our unabashed consumption of cocktails, delicious food and roasted marshmallows.

We leave Club Getaway, satisfied that we have finally achieved our ideal mix of partying, healthy activities, nature, romance and fun, all rolled into one. The perfect weekend vacation.

Getaway Weekends include all meals, wine with dinner, all sports and activities, all nightly entertainment and lodging.

Club Getaway is a "Camp for Grownups" located in the Berkshire Mountains of Kent, Connecticut just 90 minutes away by car or Getaway bus.

Support for Obamacare rises after Supreme Court blessing

Voter support for President Barack Obama's health care overhaul has increased following the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling upholding it, a Reuters/Ipsos poll released yesterday showed.

Among all registered voters, support for the law rose to 48 percent in the online survey conducted after Thursday's ruling, up from 43 percent before the court decision.

The survey showed increased backing from Republicans and, crucially, the political independents whose support will be essential to winning the Nov. 6 presidential election.

Thirty-eight percent of independents supported the healthcare overhaul. That was up from 27 percent from a Reuters/Ipsos poll taken days before the justices' ruling.

"This is a win for Obama. This is his bill. There's not really any doubt in people's minds, that it belongs to him," said Julia Clark, vice president at Ipsos Public Affairs. "It's his baby. It's literally been labeled Obamacare. ... Maybe it works in his favor now that there's a little bit of a victory dance going on."

Republican opposition to the law stayed strong, if somewhat weaker than before the high court ruled. Eighty-one percent of Republicans opposed it in the most recent survey, down from 86 percent in the poll conducted June 19-23. REUTERS

After ruling, will states be ready to act?

Policy experts question whether enough U.S. states will be ready to implement the health care law when it takes full effect in 2014.

Up to now, most states have avoided decisive action to build the private insurance exchanges that would extend health coverage to an additional 16 million Americans. Governors in largely Republican states who oppose the entire law may still refuse to act on the exchanges, requiring the federal government to step in to operate them. REUTERS

China is world's new

60 seconds with ...

Locusts, mines, waves and terrorists

Adam Baker, lecturer in space engineering, Kingston University

With China in space, is this a new space race?
There's booming activity in space, but it's not like the '60s, when countries competed to put a man on the moon for prestige reasons. Now countries are using space for practical reasons. Governments and companies now have satellites in space that monitor everything from weather patterns that could affect crops [and] freak waves that could damage ships to terrorists trying blow up oil pipelines. Mining companies, for example, use space to find new metals deposits.

Which countries are active in space now that the U.S. and Russia are scaling back?
India is very active. It focuses on monitoring crops, which is driven by the need to feed its population. And many developing countries, for example in Africa, do the same. Algeria just ordered three satellites from Britain. It will use them to monitor crops and locust patterns.

Chinese astronauts have groundbreaking stay on the country's new space station Their mission is latest installment in China's ambitious and emerging space program And it's not all in the name of science

Last weekend three astronauts, including one woman, blasted off to China's new space station, rather immodestly called the Heavenly Palace. And China has even grander plans for outer space.

"Space is a top priority for China," said Professor Walter Peeters, President of the International Space University. "But it doesn't have access to U.S. space technology, so it's developing all the technology on its own. In 2020, China will have the most autonomous space station in the world."

The current mission, Shenzhou 9, is China's first manned space mission docking with the Heavenly Palace (Tiangong in Chinese). Though Tiangong is much smaller than the International Space Station, China is the only country in the world that has its own space station.

"This is techno-nationalism," said Jill Stuart, lecturer in Space Politics at the London School of Economics. "Pride and glory plays a role in every country's space program, but especially so in China's."

But China's space lust also has pragmatic reasons. "I once asked a Chinese friend, 'Why are you putting so much money into space?'" Peeters said. "He answered, 'Because we want to sell cars.'"

> "One can use frontier technologies from space exploration in commercial sectors."
> PROFESSOR LAN XUE

Indeed, Chinese industry stands to benefit greatly from the country's space exploration. "One can use frontier technologies from space exploration in commercial sectors," according to Professor Lan Xue, dean of the School of Public Policy and Management at Tsinghua University in Beijing. "If a company had to do that kind of research on its own, it would be extremely expensive."

In other words, China wants its space program to do for its industry what NASA's memory foam did for US airlines. "But why doesn't China skip the space station and go directly to Mars, or mine resources on the moon?" Stuart said. "Having Chinese astronauts on the moon would really shake the Americans up, especially since they don't have a space shuttle anymore."

Using space to monitor crops, feed growing population

Competition has always been a key factor in space exploration.

But now countries are launching space programs not to put a man on the moon — but to improve their economies.

"Space isn't a priority for Russia anymore, but India and Brazil are investing heavily in space research," Walter Peeters of the International Space University said. "India does it because it needs water and food. It's developing a whole infrastructure based in space for its booming population."

Indeed, India uses satellites to track their crops to see when they're ready for harvest: much cheaper than maintaining a huge staff on the ground.

Problems

▶ The U.S. doesn't own the moon or any other part of space. That's the challenge as an increasing number of companies set out to try to mine minerals from space.

▶ The growing interest in space resources means we're running out of space in space. The orbit already hosts thousands of satellites — and a layer of space junk now surrounds the Earth.

Deadly heat wave bakes US; millions left without power

ALEX WONG/GETTY IMAGES

Much of the eastern United States sweltered under oppressive heat for at least the third straight day yesterday after violent storms took a dozen lives and knocked out power to more than 3 million customers.

Emergencies were declared in Maryland, Ohio, Virginia, West Virginia, and Washington, D.C., on Saturday because of damage from overnight storms, which unleashed hurricane-force winds across and a 500-mile stretch of the mid-Atlantic region.

Power crews worked to restore service to homes and businesses, and officials in some areas said the job could take up to a week. Utilities in Ohio, Virginia and Maryland described damage to their power grids as catastrophic. In Ohio, power outages hit two-thirds of the state with about 1 million homes and businesses left without electricity.

The mercury hit 106 degrees in Atlanta on Saturday, according to Accuweather.com.

President Barack Obama authorized FEMA to coordinate all disaster relief efforts in storm-ravaged Ohio.

The storms' rampage came amid roasting temperatures that topped 100 degrees in several southern cities, including Atlanta, where the mercury hit 106 degrees. One of the hardest-hit cities was Charlotte, N.C., where the mercury hovered at about 101 degrees yesterday afternoon.

From St. Louis to Washington, the forecasts were for temperatures that could climb to more all-time records. REUTERS

TOKYO. Kansai Electric Power Co. yesterday restarted the 1,180-megawatt No. 3 unit at its Ohi atomic plant, the utility said, Japan's first nuclear reactor to come back online since the Fukushima crisis, despite public safety concerns.

The government on June 16 approved the restart of the No. 3 and No. 4 reactors at the Ohi plant to avert a potential summer power crunch, sparking street protests around Japan.

The No.4 unit will resume operations later this month.

▶ The domestic automotive industry is bouncing back, and so are careers in domestic automobile repair.

Training spotlight: Automotive repair

Howard W. Ferris is the dean of transportation and energy at Massachusetts Bay Community College. He has nearly 40 years of experience in the automotive repair industry and oversees all the auto tech courses at MassBay, one of the leading programs in the country.

$36,180

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as of 2011 the median pay for auto mechanics was $36,180 per year.

What would you look for in a training program?

I would want to see a direct relationship with the industry; there are ... at least 50 nationwide. At MassBay, we have partnerships with Toyota, BMW, Chrysler and GM. When schools have these partnerships, they offer exposure to the latest and greatest technology. I would also want to see a co-op component. No matter how great your training environment is, it has to be contrived on some level or it's not the actual conditions.

What's the difference between a community college technician program and a private technical school?

Community college programs are generally subsidized by the taxpayers, so it can be more affordable. We also offer an associate's degree, which might be good if you think you might want to do something different down the road.

Yours is a two-year program, and technical school programs are usually six months to a year.

Yes. They concentrate on the core automotive courses. We have an academic core that needs to be fulfilled.

Did the collapse of the domestic automotive industry affect your program?

Yes. But we've come back just as fast. People really want to work on a domestic product. As long as the companies are viable — which they are — it's not a problem.

BRUCE WALSH

The letters to look for in a training program ...

NATEF: The National Automotive Technicians Education Foundation is a non-profit that evaluates automotive training courses. Schools with NATEF certification are considered legitimate programs in the industry.

ASE: Fewer than half of all automotive mechanics nationwide are Automotive Service Excellence-certified in at least one area of expertise. ASE certification is a great way to get a leg up in the industry, and a school that offers a clear path toward this credential is invaluable.

Rikers inmates graduate with high school diplomas

More than two dozen students graduated last Tuesday from one of New York City's more unusual schools, where pens are forbidden and armed guards watch over every classroom.

The ceremony at the East River Academy on Rikers Island allowed prisoners to take a step toward a better future with a high school equivalency diploma, known as a GED certificate.

"Wow! Wow! I say 'wow' because now I have something people can appreciate me for," says Adboul Hanne, who is awaiting trial on an attempted murder charge.

Experts say educating prisoners is critical for improving their chances of staying out of jail once they are released.

Rikers makes the school mandatory for inmates who are 16 or 17 and encourages it for inmates ages 18 to 21. Some 3,600 students pass through the school per year, and about 800 are enrolled at any given time, the New York City Department of Correction says.

"I don't want you ever to touch foot in this place again," Dennis Walcott, the city's education chancellor, told the graduates on Tuesday.

New graduate Arisleida Duarte, 22, says she did not know how to write an essay or use punctuation before attending the school. She earned her diploma after giving birth twice during two jail stints, she says.

"The fact that my two kids have been born here totally changed my point of view," says Duarte, who was charged in 2010 with attempted murder and is awaiting trial.

Despite its setting, the graduation ceremony was much like any other taking place in high schools across the city.

Inmates dressed in yellow or blue gowns and mortar boards approached the podium to their parents' cheers and shouts of encouragement. Even tough-looking jail officers cracked smiles.

Clutching his diploma, Jamar Allah, 19, said he had dropped out of school, like nearly half the students at Rikers.

He has been housed at Rikers since May on burglary charges that have since been reduced to criminal trespass.

Allah says he plans to enroll at a community college to study culinary science and business management.

But that will have to wait. For now, he is in jail, housed in a 60-bed dormitory until his Oct. 1 release date. REUTERS

Challenges

One of the most difficult challenges is developing a coherent curriculum in a jail that is designed to house inmates who are serving less than a year — or in many cases are jailed only a few weeks while their case is resolved and they are moved elsewhere, says Nick Marinacci, the school's principal. With such a churning population, semester-long projects are a difficult undertaking. Instead, the school tries to chop up its curriculum into weeklong chunks.

▶ "I tell my staff, 'Teach like there's no tomorrow,'" says Marinacci, who oversees 14 teachers and three assistant principals.

THE WORD

Metro's Monica Weymouth shares her take on the world of gossip @monicaatmetro monica.weymouth@metro.us

The feed ...

Checking in with some of Hollywood's biggest names to see what they've been up to — in their own words, in 140 characters or fewer.

@BetteMidler: All the actors are young and getting younger. I remember when stars had glamour. And pubic hair.

@AlbertBrooks: Based on the success of Magic Mike I am now developing a 3D lap dancing movie.

@Joan_Rivers: Any moron offended by the gay pride rainbow Oreo cookie would die if they knew what the Keebler elves were doing inside the Hollow Tree.

@Questlove: Worst feelin ever: do a 2 hr show/2 hr dj gig. drippin wet. get back to hotel to discover @Delta has yet to deliver my lost luggage.

Congrats, Adele!

Over the weekend, Adele announced that she is pregnant with her first baby with boyfriend Simon Konecki.

"I'm delighted to announce that Simon and I are expecting our first child together," the singer posted on her website. "I wanted you to hear the news direct from me. Obviously, we're over the moon and very excited."

Babies, boyfriends, No. 1 albums: How is Adele supposed to pen supercatchy songs about heartbreak when this is what she's waking up to? This lady is one puppy away from a Metro intervention.

Katie Holmes gets feisty in divorce

We all knew that when Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes got a divorce, it was going to be a weird one.

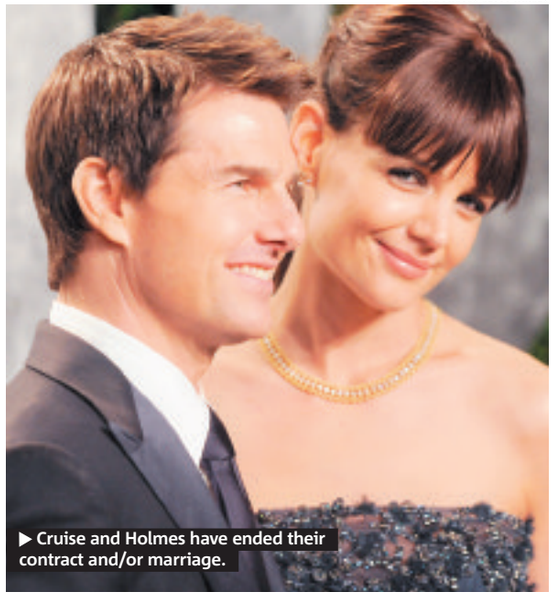
What we didn't expect was that after five years, Katie would snap out of her dead-behind-the-eyes trance with so much fight left in her.

Before filing for divorce on Thursday, the actress had already rented a separate apartment for herself in New York. Although she does occasionally live in the city, it could have been a strategic move: She's requesting sole custody of 6-year-old daughter Suri, which is more likely to be granted in New York than Los Angeles, where joint custody is more popular.

"Katie's primary concern remains, as it always has been, her daughter's best interest," Holmes' lawyer said in a statement Friday.

The "best interest" part is, reportedly, a reference to the Church of Scientology, which Holmes doesn't want Suri raised in. Although a high-profile member while with Cruise, Holmes is now afraid that she is considered a "threat" to the organization — similar to how Nicole Kidman was shunned after her divorce from Cruise in 2001 — and is being followed around New York by church authorities, reports TMZ.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES



▶ Cruise and Holmes have ended their contract and/or marriage.

Creepy? For sure. But if Scientology wants to be respected as a real religion in 2012, it's going to have to start doing much more depraved stuff than stalking Katie Holmes.

A surprise?

In statement released by his rep, Tom Cruise claims he is "deeply saddened" to learn of the filing, which happened while he was shooting on location in Iceland. And yes, while we're also hesitant to believe Cruise feels real human emotions off camera, it does seem possible that he wasn't expecting the filing: Sources tell Us Weekly that the family was recently spotted having fun at a Reykjavik restaurant.

Just last month, he was being closer to cute than couch-jumping-crazy when speaking about his wife to Playboy. "She is an extraordinary person, and if you spent five minutes with her, you'd see it," he said.

Well now, this is awkward: Tom Cruise-as-robot is one of the few sacred truths of this page. Katie, we don't have much over here — please don't take this from us.

Talking points

Brown vs. Drake continues

In the grand tradition of setting rap beefs to song, Chris Brown released a remix of "Game Don't Like" over the weekend addressed to Drake, who he feuded with in a notorious New York nightclub incident recently. The lyrics, in part., read: "One on one, what you scared bruh? / Huh, matter of fact, 'Take Care' bruh." "Take Care" is the name of Drake's second album.

Kim Kardashian: Spanx a lot

She may have one of the world's most famous figures, but Kim Kardashian admits that she isn't always happy with what she sees in the mirror. "I'm such a perfectionist. I don't think I'm ever really comfortable," she admits in an interview with the U.K.'s "Lorraine" show, while calling Spanx "the greatest invention."

Hart

As for dieting, she prefers to hit the gym. "I don't eat as good. I work out all the time," she says.

It's a boy ... or a girl for Hart

Melissa Joan Hart is getting ready to become a mom for the third time, but she's keeping the baby's gender a surprise. "We always wanted the mystery the other two times around, but the first time we gave into pressure from everyone and curiosity and the second time our ultrasound technician gave it away before we had a chance to stop them," she tells People.

No drinking and parenting for Snooki

Snooki plans to move in with fiance Jionni LaValle's family when her baby arrives, and she's already set some house drinking rules. "Me and Jionni have made a rule: If we're hungover or if we've had two drinks, we're not going near the child," she tells Us Weekly. "We'll give him to grandma. God forbid we drop our baby!"

Party rockers, reckless bikers, smiling grooms in the house

1 Will Arnett can ignore all of the bicycle safety codes he wants, as long as he keeps looking as cute as he was when he was leaving Whole Foods in New York City on Thursday. But seriously, Will, if you can't hear a horn beeping with those ear buds in, you might hurt that pretty little non-helmet-wearing head of yours. Take care, Gob Bluth!

2 On Thursday, members of the Guinness Book of World Records awarded Wayne Coyne and the Flaming Lips a certificate for breaking a record set by Jay-Z for the most consecutive live concerts in multiple cities within 24 hours. The new record is now eight cities in 24 hours.

3 When does Adam Levine sleep, and how does he look like an entirely different person when he wears glasses? On Friday, the Maroon 5 singer and Keira Knightley filmed scenes for the upcoming movie "Can a Song Save Your Life?" in New York City.

4 No it was not opposite day on Saturday: Alec Baldwin was just a little more courteous to photographers than he has been in recent history. This may have had something to do with the fact that he was on his way into St. Patrick's Old Cathedral in New York City, where he wed yoga instructor Hilaria Thomas. Also spotted walking into the ceremony were Tina Fey, Woody Allen and Mariska Hargitay.

5 Loud colors, inflatable zebras, Shufflebot and the party rocking combo of Redfoo and SkyBlu can only mean one thing. It's LMFAO in concert. They performed at the Wells Fargo Center in Philly on Friday.

DARLING DENISE

LIONSGATE PUBLICITY

As she munches on Peanut M&Ms, exchanges a quick word with her publicist and taps out a lightning-fast text message — “I’m so sorry, just making arrangements with the kids,” she blurts — Denise Richards is every bit the multitasking mom. But in a matter of hours, she’ll dial up the glamour, working the red carpet for the premiere of “Madea’s Witness Protection,” the seventh installment in Tyler Perry’s ever-expanding franchise.

Released nationwide on Friday, the raucous comedy is centered on George Needleman (Eugene Levy), an honest but absent-minded Wall Street CFO who learns his firm is operating a mob-backed Ponzi scheme. When Brian, a federal prosecutor from Atlanta (Perry), places George and his family in the safest hideaway he can think of — his Aunt Madea’s down South — what unfolds is a whacky collision of cultures, punctuated with brazen one-liners, courtesy of Perry’s fearless, larger-than-life matriarch.

“I haven’t seen [the film] yet,” confesses Richards, 41, who plays George’s aggravated second wife, Kate. “My girls won’t be embarrassed? Like, ‘Mom, you’re acting really weird’?” she asks with a self-conscious giggle.

She’s asking about an especially outrageous scene where Kate channels Madea’s thunderous, trademark holler in a last-ditch effort to discipline her spoiled stepdaughter (Danielle Campbell). “Thank God they sprung that scene on me on set, otherwise I would’ve gotten myself worked up,” she admits. “It was intimidating. I was imitating Tyler Perry imitating Madea.”

Richards sings praises for Perry, marveling at his seamless ability to write, direct and simultaneously play three characters (in addition to Brian and Madea, Perry also portrays Uncle Joe, Madea’s eccentric, live-in brother). “He’s so sexy, he’s got this great presence,” Richards gushes, describing Perry’s charismatic offscreen persona. “And to go from that to Madea and Joe telling fart jokes … I’m like, how does that come out of you?”

The cast, which also includes Doris Roberts, John Amos and Romeo Miller, shot exclusively in Perry’s Atlanta studio, or “empire,” as Richards dubs it. “There’s a different feel when you’re on location together; no one has their families to go home to,” she explains, though she was eventually joined by her three daughters. “But people could not be nicer. We had that camaraderie.”

Amiable exes?

Richards guest stars on ex-husband Charlie Sheen’s highly anticipated comeback sitcom, “Anger Management,” which made its FX debut last week.

▶ “If it gets picked up, I’ll be a recurring character,” she says enthusiastically. “I think people will be surprised to see Charlie playing a different character; it’s not what they’re expecting.”

Foul-mouthed teddy bear outperforms male strippers at box office

UNIVERSAL PICTURES/ILOURA

▶ "Ted" beat box office expectations.

"Ted," an R-rated comedy featuring a foul-mouthed teddy bear, unseated Pixar's "Brave" as the top film in the U.S. and Canada this weekend with $54.1 million in sales for Universal Pictures.

"Magic Mike," about the world of male strippers, was second in its debut with $39.2 million in sales for Time Warner Inc.'s Warner Bros., researcher Hollywood.com Box-Office said yesterday.

"Ted," which was made for about $50 million and stars Mark Wahlberg, beat out three other new releases including "Tyler Perry's Madea's Witness Protection."

"A film about a cute teddy bear that is not for children is a risky bet, but they pulled it off as the film definitely came in above expectations," says Paul Sweeney, a media and entertainment analyst for Bloomberg Industries. "The success of R-rated films this week shows there is still demand for films for adults despite the bevy of summer action films and children's movies."

In "Ted," Wahlberg plays a man whose teddy bear comes to life as a result of a childhood wish. He must choose whether to stay with his girlfriend or keep his friendship with the bawdy teddy bear. Mila Kunis co-stars in the picture, which was directed by Seth MacFarlane, the creater of the "Family Guy" television series.

Warner Bros.' male-stripper movie "Magic Mike," also R-rated, features Channing Tatum in the title role. An experienced stripper, Mike teaches a young performer named "The Kid" how to party, pick up women and make easy money. Matthew McConaughey, Alex Pettyfer and Olivia Munn co-star. The picture was made for about $7 million, according to Box Office Mojo.

"Brave," from Disney's Pixar studio, finished in third place with $34 million, falling 49 percent from last weekend, when it opened up at No. 1. The film tells the story of the rebellious princess Merida, who prefers riding horses and archery to the more sedentary palace duties of a princess.

How to go about finding a therapist

I'd like to start seeing a therapist. How do I choose someone? I'm a little nervous to tell all my secrets to a stranger.

Finding the right therapist is a bit like dating — with a few exceptions, as you can imagine.

I'm not recommending skipping from therapy couch to couch until you find the perfect match. But unless the professional sitting before you gives you the willies, I would suggest giving him or her at least three visits to see if your comfort level increases. But even comfort can be tricky; if your new therapist reminds you of the mother you hate, it could be a good match — she might help you access and work through the thoughts and feelings about your mother that always trip you up in relationships.

What happens in the room between client and therapist is often a reflection of what happens outside the room between clients and their significant relationships. A good healing relationship with a therapist can be a powerful thing. But I'm getting ahead of myself.

No insurance necessary

KIM SCHNEIDERMAN, MSW, LCSW

WWW.NOVEL-PERSPECTIVE.COM

Your secret's safe

Only under certain, specific circumstances do therapists break confidentiality:

- Suspected cases of child physical and sexual abuse, past and present (the past is required in case the abuser still has access to children)
- Serious threats to harming yourself or another person
- When sharing information with medical professionals, insurance companies and anyone else you designate
- When seeking consultation from other mental health experts, who are legally bound to keep the info confidential

Here are some basic considerations:

1 Make sure the therapist has the appropriate mental health license, which varies from state to state. This includes Licensed Clinical Social Worker (LCSW), Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist (LMFT) or Licensed Professional Counselor (LPC). He or she might have a Ph.D. or PsyD in Psychology.

2 While it's generally not a good idea to see the same therapist as a relative (unless it's a family therapist), it helps to get referrals from trustworthy sources. If you want to use your insurance, there are also several online sites (e.g. Psychology Today) that match you with therapists who take your insurance.

3 Inquire about treatment approaches and specializations. Most therapists can treat depression, anxiety, self-esteem or relationship issues. But if you need help with a cocaine addiction, go to a treatment center or find someone who is a credentialed alcoholism and substance abuse counselor. If you have obsessive-compulsive disorder, make sure your therapist has experience treating OCD. A little research can go a long way.

Interview

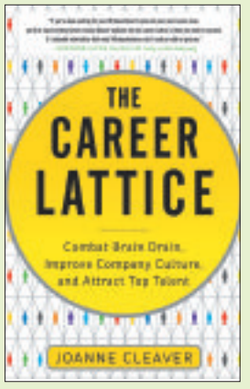
Growing — and blooming — on the 'Career Lattice'

In 2004, Joanne Cleaver was the deputy business editor at the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel and envisioned herself staying there for decades. Just a few years later, the newspaper industry was in a free fall and Cleaver found herself laid off. But her unorthodox career path — mixing an entrepreneurial approach with freelance and staff positions — allowed her to adjust to the changing media landscape. And she's sure that versatility can help your career, too. Her new book — "The Career Lattice: Combat Brain Drain, Improve Company Culture, and Attract Top Talent" — was released by McGraw-Hill last month.

Today, Cleaver is president of the Chicago-based media-consulting firm, Wilson-Taylor Associates.

Why is the traditional career ladder collapsing?

We've seen a shift toward team structures in organizations. Companies will have a team devoted to a project, and that team will disperse and reform for another project. Also, during the recession many organizations eliminated entire layers of management, so each rung of the ladder has become much steeper in many cases — and more incapable of developing talent.



Is there a silver lining in any of this?

Now we know we're on our own, and there's a certain freedom in that. The "Lattice" provides structure for channeling the ambition that you have. You don't have to rely on what your human resources department tells you. You don't have to follow in anyone's footsteps or flounder around accumulating certifications that lead nowhere.

What's the first step in designing a "Career Lattice"?

First, you have to inventory your skills. Your job description describes what you need to do to accomplish your job at your organization. But you bring more than that. You have skills and aptitudes that could shape the acquisition of a new skill. So you need a 360-degree inventory of everything you bring to your career. Then you can begin to mix and match your technical skills, experience and natural talents to position yourself for a lateral move. And the more lateral moves you make, the more pieces of your skill set will be validated. BRUCE WALSH

▶ Advances in mobile technology make telecommuting an option for many.

On July Fourth, most of us will have a day off to celebrate our freedom — usually with fireworks and hot dogs. But what about your freedom back at the office? We asked experts how we can spend less time chained to our desks and more time flexing our creative muscles.

Get flexible

"Flexibility is freedom," declares Allison O'Kelly, founder/CEO of Mom Corps. She suggests learning your company's specific options for flexible schedules before approaching your boss. "Check with your human resources department before speaking with your manager, to see if there is a flexible work plan in place. Before diving in headlong, educate yourself on the mutual benefits of flexible work options and be prepared to do the same for your manager."

Telecommute

Heather R. Huhman, founder and president of Come Recommended, is a firm believer in telecommuting. "Many employees are beginning to telecommute to improve their work-life balance," says Huhman. "Many jobs require work that can be completed from home, so talk to your boss about testing out telecommuting for a day or two. If you check in regularly via Skype, e-mail or phone and complete all tasks on time, both the employer and the employee will benefit from the increased freedom telecommuting provides." Bonus: You can wear your American flag PJs all day.

"If you are exceeding the current standards for your job and contributing to your boss's goals, then you can often ask for and receive more autonomy"
JOHN MILLIKIN

Give the best performance

It's no surprise that top performers are given the most leeway. "If you are exceeding the current standards for your job and contributing to your boss's goals, then you can often ask for and receive more autonomy, because you have built a reserve of trust from your manager," explains retired clinical professor John Millikin. "The more your manager sees that he or she does not need to manage you closely, the more freedom will be allowed."

Sounding off on health care

We are getting no help from the television newscasters in understanding what the Obamacare issue is all about. First, it is not the president's job to create laws. Second, the "law" is unconstitutional in that it is not the job of government to be involved with health care. Practically everything the government in Washington touches is made worse: public education, government spending, wars, housing, just to name a few. Health care should be locally controlled or be influenced by state governments not the federal government. And one more thing, Romney says he will "reform" the health care law. What a phoney conservative! He should be seeking to abolish the monstrosity not reform it. FRANK ST. GEORGE, EAST ROCKAWAY

The Affordable Care Act frees an employee from "job lock," the reluctance to voluntarily terminate employment for fear of losing health care benefits, particularly if one has a pre-existing condition. Now, it will take more than company health insurance to hold a valuable, experienced employee who should be better paid or better treated. GLENN HAYES, KEW GARDENS, N.Y.

Romney says that if elected he would repeal "the debacle that is Obamacare." In supreme court justice Roberts' decision on the affordable health care act he states that the blueprint for "Obamacare" was laid out by the former governor of Massachusetts. Mitt Romney! Hypocrisy thy name is Republican. ROBERT LA ROSA, WHITESTONE, N.Y.

The Supreme Court ruled that Obamacare is Constitutional. But is it the right call? As a nation, we are in a sluggish economy and millions of people are out of work. In my opinion, if you force small businesses to insure all their employees, they will not look to expand or hire more workers. In addition to that, if you force those who cannot afford insurance to buy it, even at a reduced rate you create a hardship. A person might be forced to make a choice between housing and food to pay for insurance. That, in my view, is just not the right way to go. FREDERICK R. BEDELL JR., GLEN OAKS VILLAGE, N.Y.

Re: 'Flags are for flying, not wearing'

I disagree on one point. The flag is a sacred piece of our national history, but that does not stop people from other countries from proudly displaying their country's colors in whatever garments or accessories they choose, because that is the very nature of America, freedom of expression. So if one chooses to wear the red, white and blue, then what's the harm? One can wear the colors of the flag, but not the flag itself; and, if you so choose, at least make sure that it's made in America! ANTHONY VASSER, SAINT ALBANS, N.Y.

Our soldiers wear U.S. flag patches on their shoulders as part of their uniform. This has been a long-standing tradition, and it was declared mandatory in 2004, with allowances for camouflage. Are we therefore to say that the U.S. military uniform is unpatriotic? DANIEL KING, VIA E-MAIL

Horoscope

♋ Cancer June 21-July 22. There's a strong chance you might have to deal with someone whom you feel wronged you in the past, but this isn't an opportunity for payback.
♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 22. Be extremely selective to whom you turn for counsel if you find yourself in need of financial advice. Go only to someone who has had a lot of success in dealing with money matters.
♍ Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22. You know how awful you felt in the past when someone treated you in a deceitful manner, so don't do anything that would cause you to be accused of this type of behavior.
♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23. You're likely to be quite imaginative, which is all well and good, as long as you don't view life's developments more negatively than positively.
♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22. If you find yourself feeling a trifle envious or jealous of a close friend, make that energy into a motivator, no matter how painful it is to do so.
♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21. You could get everyone frustrated with you if you vacillate too much on an important issue and fail to take a stance. In order to command respect, be decisive.
♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19. Usually you have a great understanding of life, and allow for the frailties in others. Today, however, you're likely to be hypercritical and do nothing but find fault with everyone. Loosen up.
♒ Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 19. Although it's not normal, you could be far too gullible and impulsively involve yourself in something that's way over your head, motivated purely by wishful thinking. Keep your feet on the ground.
♓ Pisces Feb. 20-March 20. The major reason you and your mate could end up in opposition is likely because neither one of you is able to effectively articulate your true feelings.
♈ Aries March 21-April 19. When working with unfamiliar materials or tools, you had better make it a point to keep your concentration from wandering. Too many bad things could happen if you don't.
♉ Taurus April 20-May 20. Although it's not normal for you, you're not beyond taking a calculated risk when you think the circumstances call for it. Just make sure what you do is well thought out in advance.
♊ Gemini May 21-June 20. Don't be surprised if people emulate the example you set, especially if you're abrasive and difficult to get along with. Others usually give back what we give out, one way or another. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Tiger takes win

Tiger Woods took over sole possession of second place in all-time PGA Tour wins with a victory at Congressional yesterday.

Woods shot a 2-under 69 as Bo Van Pelt bogeyed the final three holes to finish one stroke back. Woods now leads the money list and FedEx standings this year.

It was Woods's 74th career win, breaking the tie he held with Jack Nicklaus. Sam Snead holds the record with 82 victories.

Torre backs Clemens for Hall of Fame

Former Yankees manager Joe Torre returned for yesterday's Old Timers' Day and, unsurprisingly, he was asked about Roger Clemens and his chances for being elected to the Hall of Fame. Clemens was recently cleared of eight perjury counts, but faces his next test in January when he is eligible for the Hall.

It seems unlikely based on how extensively he was named in the Dec. 2007 Mitchell Report.

Clemens won 83 games with Torre as manager from 1999-2003 and in 2007, but admitted that the questions will always persist.

"He is [a Hall of Famer] to me," Torre said. "I can't make other people look at him that way. I can just tell you the way I feel. There is a question mark. There always will be."

Torre also said that like many Yankees, he disliked Clemens when he was an opponent on the Blue Jays and Red Sox; but once he joined the team, Torre said he regarded him like a son.

▶ Cano's breakout coincided with the start of the Yankees' current hot streak that has seen them win 27-of-36 games since May 22.

DON'T YA KNOW

Robbie Cano is hottest hitter in baseball ◗ Blasts ninth home run in his last 14 games in 4-2 win ◗ Joins All-Stars with Jeter, Granderson, CC

Among the more frequently used adjectives to describe Robinson Cano's swing when it is going right are elegant and smooth.

For the last month, that swing has returned with no greater example than Cano's two-run bomb into the right-center seats in the bottom of the third inning of yesterday's 4-2 win over the White Sox.

"When he's locked in, he can hit the ball all over the place," Derek Jeter said "Robby knows how to hit. When you play this game, you go through stretches where you feel good and you feel bad. When you feel good, like he does right now, he's pretty tough to pitch to."

"He's playing a lot of [good] baseball," manager Joe Girardi said. "You can see why he's one of the most dangerous hitters in the game, just because of what he's able to do."

Cano was reluctant to say what has caused him to be so locked in of late. He would only credit the work that he does with hitting coach Kevin Long during early batting practice and taking advantage of getting pitches to hit.

"I work hard outside, hitting in the cage," Cano said. "I'm just taking advantage of pitches over the middle of the plate."

The latest blast occurred a day before Cano announces his picks are for next week's home run derby in Kansas City. Cano did not give any clues about his selections but said that like last year, his father Jose, a former pitcher with the Astros will throw to him.

Cano hit 12 home runs in June, including one on June 30. A day later, his 20th home run marked his ninth in his last 14 games and the Yankees' 23rd in the last 11 games.

"We've seen him do this before," Jeter said. "When he gets locked in, he's locked in. He hits many home runs."

Jeter, Cano get All-Star nods

The Yankees landed three starters for next week's game in Kansas City as Derek Jeter, Curtis Granderson and Robinson Cano won the fan voting at their respective positions.

Jeter was selected by the fans for the seventh straight time and is going for the 13th time overall. CC Sabathia was also named, but will not pitch as he is currently on the DL.

"I'm the one who gets to tell them [they made the team]," Girardi said. "So it's kind of nice. It's a thrill for me to tell them. They deserved it; they earned it, and I'm very proud of what they accomplished."

Rangers make minor, early moves

The first day of free agency was more notable for what the Rangers didn't do than what they did, but they did add an infusion of toughness in the wake of Brandon Prust's apparent exit.

Prust, who led the team in penalty minutes as the squad's main enforcer, reportedly signed a four-year, $10-million contract with Montreal.

That left the team with the immediate need to fill a physical hole on their backline. They addressed it by re-signing the 6-foot-4 Stu Bickel to a one-year, $1.5-million deal and adding former Penguins forward Arron Asham and Islanders brawler Michael Haley.

2M Asham signed a two-year, $2 million contract with the Rangers. Prust made $800,000 last season, but wanted a large raise.

Asham had five goals and 11 assists last season in Pittsburgh, but also a healthy 76 penalty minutes in 62 appearances.

Haley meanwhile is more fighter than skater, as he totaled 125 minutes in the box with Islanders' minor-league affiliate Bridgeport last season. He likely won't see much ice time for the Blueshirts unless his particular skills are required. MARK OSBORNE

Brodeur looks at Blackhawks

It would be as comfortable as Joe Montana in a Chiefs' jersey, but it appears as though Devils legend Martin Brodeur is at least eyeing other opportunities.

The 40-year-old free agent and future Hall of Famer is looking at the Blackhawks and they have mutual interest, according to ESPN.

The NHL's all-time wins leader — all in New Jersey — broke off negotiations with the Devils last week, though his exit isn't a done deal. METRO/MO

Nets re-sign Wallace, look at Johnson trade

Brooklyn brings back player acquired in midseason trade Now set sights on enticing Williams to return

If you are going to surrender your top 10 pick for someone, it had better be for more than 16 games.

Luckily for the Nets, that appears to be the case; they have reportedly come to terms on a four-year, $40-million deal with Gerald Wallace on the first day of the NBA's free agency period. Deals cannot be officially signed until July 11.

Brooklyn traded their top pick in last week's NBA Draft for Wallace with 16 games remaining in the season, only to see him opt out of the final year of his contract and become an unrestricted free agent.

Wallace averaged 15.2 points, 6.8 rebounds and 3.1 assists per game on the Nets.

While they have a deal with Wallace, the biggest fish of the season, Deron Williams, will reportedly speak to both the Nets and Mavericks today. Williams will reportedly only sign with one of the two teams.

GARY DINEEN/NBAE/GETTY IMAGES

▶ Wallace

If the Nets are going to entice Williams, they will need to add more talent and one of the rumored moves could come with the addition of former all star Joe Johnson of the Hawks. Dwight Howard appears to be out of reach, despite declaring his desire to be traded to the Nets, but Johnson is more reasonable.

The Nets hope to pull off a trade for Johnson — once receiving assurances Williams will re-sign — including the expiring contracts of Johan Petro and Anthony Morrow. The sticking point on any deal is MarShon Brooks, who the Hawks want included, but the Nets are reluctant to part with.
